NBA 2K22 will also be re-released on some of the most recent video game consoles, including the PlayStation 5 and Xbox Series X/S. The game will be available on a variety of platforms, including PC, Nintendo Switch, PS4, and Xbox One. The City, like NBA 2K21, will be exclusive to the next generation of video game consoles. Players on the Nintendo Switch, PlayStation 4, Xbox One, and PC will be able to board the 2K Cruise, which will transport them to a new setting: a luxury sailing cruise ship.

Users of the PlayStation 5 and Xbox Series X/S consoles will find that MyCAREER and The City have been combined into a single hub where they can interact with new NBA 2K22 MT and a compelling storyline. More information will be released in early September. Although the city version of NBA 2K21 includes fewer NPCs and missions, NBA 2K22 appears to be more focused on the core of the experience, which helps to make the city feel more narrative. More importantly, it allows players to tell their story in a way that goes beyond their time on the court.

The official release date for NBA 2K22 may have been revealed by a leaked image on Twitter. Athletes who may appear on the cover of the game legend are also depicted in the image. The image was leaked by the NBA 2K22 and Intel Twitter pages, according to the source. No one knows how this page obtains the image, but it appears to be very official.

The only reason we are classifying this as a rumor is because 2K Sports has not yet released any official information about it. On the surface, the leaked image appears to be completely authentic. We are hopeful that more specific information about the game will be released soon. Take-Two has not confirmed any of these claims, but if they are correct, NBA 2K22 will be released worldwide on September 10. Pre-purchasing NBA 2K22 MT allows you to improve your overall performance in the game.
